

One day two individuals met

One day two individuals met
Neither hoping for anything
And in the eyes of one the other saw himself
It was as if for the first time
A new sensation
And a serene pleasure
They did not say much
Just deciding to walk together
Without touching hands
Recognizing
That they belonged
To two different worlds
But pleasure invaded their souls
And disturbed their plans
Which caused them anguish
And joy at the same time
Without knowing what to make of this new story
They decided to cut wood

And construct a simple house
Always in silence
All this took time
During which
They were infinitely happy
Without saying a word
But one day the house was ready
And both knew they would never live in it
Each collected his possessions
Looked at the other tenderly
Fear and shame mixed
One finally said
"Goodbye"
And they separated for ever
The house remained still
But not lonely
For much longer
The animals in the fields
Gradually approached
The beautiful house

And through the open door
One by one they slowly entered
Feeling protected
Each animal found a corner
Creating its own living space
And they used the house for ever
