

VILLE POLYCHROME

More than 200 metres of transparent images make up the architecture of this utopian town where colours intermingle without losing their specificity.

This is my proposal for a future world, desired, and perhaps inevitable. Let us remain optimistic. Human beings, like these colours, are all different. Even better, they are unique. But the specificity of each of us, does not exclude meeting, dialogue, empathy.

For this reason I call this installation, utopian work. Men and women join together their creative forces to construct a reality that exceeds the inevitable human destiny.

Poetry and music offer their resonance to the realization of this adventure.

The desire of creation is the force that inspires me to give life to the colours, which will make this transparent city a Space.

Spectators evolve in a place that inspires the best of the dream enriched by memory.

Enthusiasm and the work will do the rest.

Armando Bergallo

English translation: Mavis Wilson